

I think the FCC should NOT consider more than one application for a vanity call from the same individual. Multiple applications increase a person's chance of getting a vanity call without any additional risk since the filing fee for the excess applications will be refunded.

Even if the fees were not refunded, it would not be fair for some people to have an advantage just because they can afford to file a large number of applications.

I favor the principle: "One person, one application"